To other Europeans the best quality of the British and in particular of the English is reserve. A reserved person is one who does not talk very much to strangers, does not show much emotion, and seldom get excited. English people tend to be like that. If they are making journey by bus, they will do their best to find an empty seat, if by train, and empty compartment. If they have to share the compartment with a stranger, they may travel many miles without starting a conversation. If a conversation does start, personal questions like, "How old are you? Or even "What is your name?" are not easily asked. Questions like "Where did you buy your watch?" or "What is your salary?" are all most impossible.
